Jorge Bolet: The Berlin Radio Recordings, Vol. III

aud 21.459 EAN: 4022143214591

International Piano (Bryce Morrison - 2019.05.01)

Additional final volume of Jorge Bolet's Berlin recordings (1961-1974) provides ample confirmation that he was one oft he finest pianists of the 20th century. For Gilels he was "the only great pianist in America", while Alicia de Larrocha could only exclaim, with characteristic candour, "Jorge, you're wonderful. The rest, they're all sh*t".

Bolet's playing ranges from "blow your socks off" virtuosity (heard here in the Strauss-Godowsky paraphrase in Die Fledermaus) to a "safety comes first" approach. His Emperor Concerto (with Moshe Atzmon) is as poetic as it is imperious, and his performance of Schumann's Third Sonata (the "Concert sans orchestre") features tonal opulence and grand sweeping lines. Bolet may have been celebrated latterly for his "divine showness" but his way with the finale's wild prestissimo tells us that his speed and dexterity were no less divine. His intensity, too, in the shuddering tremolandi climax – like a sudden bolt of lightning – reminds you of music as anarchic as anything in Schumann.

There is sensuous magic in Bolet's Debussy, even when he is ponderous in Masques. His Chopin Etudes Op. 25 are among the most musical on mood, effortlessly crossing the Rubicon from pragmatism to poetry. Delectably light-fingered in No 6 and a true singer oft he keyboard in No 5, he is magnificent in No 12, riding the ocean wave with idiosyncratic grandeur. His Schumann-Liszt Frühlingsnacht and Strauss-Godowsky blaze with a brilliance known to few pianists.

Transfers are admirable and these memorable discs come luxuriously packaged with several photos of Bolet, including one with Boston, his beloved pug.

This third and final volume of Jorge Boleti Berlin recordings (1961-1974) provides mple confirmation that he was one of the nest painsts of the 20th century. For Gileis was the only great planist in America, chile Alicia de Larrecha could only exclaim, with characteristic candour, Jorge, you're ronderful. The rest, they're all sh't'. Bolet's playing ranges from 'Blow your sock d' virtuosity (beard here in the Strauss-

Undowsky paraphrane on Dat Parammant to a ladety comes first approach. This Employme Concerto (with Moshe Atzmon) is as poetic at its imperious, and his performance of Schumann's Third Sonata (the 'Concert anso orchestric') fastures tonal opponence and grand sweeping lines. Bolet may have been obehrated lattery for his divines downessi but his way with the finale's wild prestissimo tells us that his speed and dexterity were no less divine. His internsity, too, in the shuddering thermoland climan- like a sudder holt of lightning - reminds you of music as anarchic as anything in Schumann.
